Policies empowering women strengthen the economy and are critical for lasting progress in development. Slowing global growth, the rising risks of climate change, conflict, and the lingering effects of COVID-19 have dealt a major setback to this progress in recent years—with disproportionate effects on the lives and livelihoods of Women.

Women in this region face significant barriers to full economic participation, including unequal access to education, finance, and employment opportunities, as well as legal and cultural obstacles that limit their ability to start and grow businesses, enter executive positions, and reach their full potential.

As the world becomes increasingly interconnected, the importance of markets and private enterprise in driving economic growth cannot be overstated. This is especially true in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region where there has been a significant increase in entrepreneurial activity in recent years, notable in a region that has traditionally leaned towards public sector employment. This increase in entrepreneurship is especially promising when combined with the high levels of educational attainment in many parts of the region. However, the glaring weakness continues to be the substantial barriers women face in pursuing their entrepreneurial dreams. Globally, 34 percent of small and medium businesses are woman owned. However, in the MENA region only 23 percent of businesses are woman-owned, ranging from 7 percent in Yemen to 49 percent in Tunisia. Further, MENA on average suffers the lowest female business participation rate in the world (19 percent). It is a multifaceted problem that stems from a combination of factors, including the lack of quality...
‘work ready’ focused education, structural discrimination within the legal environment, and broad socio-cultural biases and attitudes.

Moreover, while the industry 4.0 revolution - which is currently transforming our societies and systems - is creating opportunities for new and greener productive models, women entrepreneurs in the Mediterranean region seem to be little aware of those offering new technologies. Yet, access to technology tends to foster entrepreneurship and economic participation. Education is critical as well for empowering women economic empowerment. More women involved in the labour markets and in leadership positions would represent a win-win situation for them and for the society as well, since it boosts economic growth for everyone.

The 43 UfM Member States in the last UfM Ministerial Declaration on Women committed to promote the transition to formal employment for women employed in the shadow economy, home-based work, care activities and in micro-small and medium-sized enterprises, as well as work in the agricultural sector and own-account and part-time work. They agreed on supporting women’s entrepreneurship, through incubation programmes for the early, seed and growth stages, on boosting investments on entrepreneurship education and targeted gender-sensitive financial services as well as on stimulating the financial institutions to adopt a gender-smart lens in their investment, especially for the Venture and Equity funds.

OBJECTIVE OF THE CONFERENCE

This conference will bring together experts, policymakers, and entrepreneurs to explore strategies for overcoming these barriers and promoting women’s economic empowerment in the Mediterranean region. Through a series of panel discussions, it will examine key challenges and opportunities in the areas of education and workforce participation, entrepreneurship, access to finance, legal and regulatory reform, and gender equality in the work environment.

The different stakeholders will have the opportunity to share good practices and lessons learned to foster women’s economic empowerment in different sectors and levels within the Euro-Mediterranean region. The distinguished speakers will discuss ways to bridge the gap in women economic participation, to facilitate female entrepreneurship, to enhance the legal systems and make them more inclusive, and to increase the percentage of women in leadership positions.
